

We married at THREE SISTERS BAKE

Killearn

It was only when they happened to come across an article about Three Sisters Bake that Claire and Andrew even considered the option of tying the knot on home soil. “We were planning on booking our wedding abroad, and had even got as far as shortlisting Greece and Italy,” says Claire. “But when I read about Three Sisters Bake weddings at Quarrier’s Village, I instantly fell in love with their style.”

The couple set their hearts on exchanging vows at the Renfrewshire venue – until they found out that weddings were no longer being held there. “We still loved the idea of a village hall wedding, but were really struggling to find somewhere to match Three Sisters Bake, so we had reverted back to planning our wedding abroad,” Claire says.

The bride and groom had settled on a Greek venue for their nuptials, but, as fate would have it, Three Sisters Bake snuck in once again and stole their hearts. “I heard that the Sisters had acquired Killearn Village Hall and that weddings were being held there. I phoned straight away to schedule a viewing.” She and Andrew toured the venue and sampled the food – and were hooked. “We had to book!” confirms Claire.

The beauty of Killearn Village Hall is its versatility, as the bride explains: “Being a blank canvas, it meant we could create the wedding we wanted – it was important to us to be able to personalise our day.” To create their botanical theme, they enlisted the help of Natalie and Laura of Lemonbox Studios. It was a clever move – Three Sisters Bake’s village hall feel and the free-flowing décor supplied by Lemonbox created a winning combination.

Décor aside, what Three Sisters Bake is best known for is its amazing menu – and cakes. Andrew and Claire fell head over heels. “The food was definitely a driving force for our booking,” confirms the bride. “We spent many weekends at the café in Killearn Village Hall, tucking into the dishes and cakes in the weeks leading up to the wedding.”

The couple’s 70 day guests were treated to mini scone canapés, sharing seafood platters for starters, a sumptuous main course, and a cake table for afters. “Best dessert ever!” champions Claire. An additional 20 guests joined in the evening fun and indulged in a buffet of artisan sandwiches, black pudding and pork sausage rolls and – yes, you guessed it – more cake. Claire was beyond pleased: “We had so many compliments about the food on the day, as well as many lovely comments since.”

And it’s not just the food that’s a triumph at Three Sisters Bake at Killearn Village Hall – the staff really excel too. “They were amazing during the planning, execution and aftercare of the day,” says Claire. “We were kept informed all the way up to the wedding, and nothing was too much trouble. They did a great job co-ordinating with our suppliers, so we had no stress.”

One member of staff really stood out for the couple: “Sheena MacMillan, our wedding co-ordinator, did a great job,” Claire reveals. “She really was exceptional.”

The couple wholeheartedly endorse the venue: “The surroundings are beautiful, the team behind the weddings are fantastic and the food and cake are scrumptious.” What more could you want? ♥
